8th InnerSource Summit, NUI Galway

Dates: 9th-11th April, 2019

The InnerSource Commons is a growing community of practitioners with the goal of creating and sharing knowledge about InnerSource: the use of open source best practices for software development within the confines of an organization. Founded in 2015, the InnerSource Commons is now supporting and connecting over seventy companies, academic institutions, and government agencies.

The InnerSource Commons supports practitioners and those who want to learn about inner source by a broad array of activities. It provides learning paths on how to get started with inner source, curates known best practices in the form of patterns, facilitates discussion on the inner source values and principles that will lead to an inner source manifesto, and organizes the leading practitioner conference dedicated to inner source - the twice-yearly InnerSource Commons Summit.

This year, the InnerSource Summit will be held in the National University of Ireland Galway. We invite interested organisations and companies to sponsor this renowned event. These summits provide a basis to encourage InnerSource practitioners to share their experiences and to collaborate with each other on improving InnerSource. They also provide an open and safe forum (under the Chatham House Rule) for members and non-members alike to exchange questions, answers, challenges and proven solutions, helping to advance the state of the art and better understanding of how InnerSource works and why specific methods succeed or fail.

Sponsor logos will feature prominently on all promotional material related to the summit. If interested in sponsoring this event, please contact Lorraine.morgan@nuigalway.ie
